NIMROD

The purpose of this book is to prove that Socialism is a religion. The founding father of Socialism was Dr. Frankenstein. Nimrod was the first Freemason and the founding father of Paganism. Dr. Frankenstein was a Freemason and a member of the Lunar Society and the Royal Society.

Please read "Descent of Man" chapters 7 and 21 at this time.

Charles Darwin proved that changing the diets of savages causes them to be less fertile. Dr. Singer worships Charles Darwin and he knows famine relief does more harm than good and he promotes famine relief.

The Forbidden Fruit

15And the LORD God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it. 16And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: 17But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.

Which sense is most important for survival?

What should you do if you are going through Hell?

What is the difference between Demons and Angels?

What is the difference between Sith and Jedi?

Here is a quote from John Adams.

"No man is more Sensible than I am, of the Services to Science and Letters, Humanity, Fraternity, and Liberty, that would have been rendered by the Encyclopedists and (Economists, By Voltaire, D'Alembert, Buffon Diderot, Rouseau La Lande, Frederick and Catharine, if they had possessed Common Sense. But they were all totally destitute of it. They all seemed to think Christendom was convinced as they were, that all Religion was "Visions Judaicques" and that their effulgent Lights had illuminated all the World. They seemed to believe, that whole Nations and Continents had been changed in their Principles Opinions Habits and Feelings by the Sovereign Grace of their Almighty Philosophy, almost as suddenly as Catholics and Calvinists believe in instantaneous Conversion. They had not considered the force of early Education on the Millions of Minds who never heard of their Philosophy.

And what was their Philosophy? Atheism; pure unadulterated Atheism. Diderot, D'Alembert, Frederick, De Lalande and Grim were indubitable Atheists. The Universe was Matter only and eternal; Spirit was a Word Without a meaning; Liberty was a Word Without a Meaning. There was no Liberty in the Universe; Liberty was a Word void of Sense. Every thought Word Passion Sentiment Feeling, all Motion and Action was necessary. All Beings and Attributes were of eternal Necessity. Conscience, Morality were all nothing but Fate."

"We all curse Robespierre and Bonaparte; but were they not both such restless vain extravagant Animals as Diderot and Voltaire? Voltaire was the greatest Literary Character and Bona the greatest Military Character of the 18th Century. There is all the difference between them. Both equally Heros and equally Cowards."

Here is a quote from Nietzsche.

"Wagner is Schopenhauerian in his hatred of the Jews to whom he is not able to do justice even when it comes to their greatest deed; after all, the Jews are the inventors of Christianity.

Wagner is Schopenhauerian in his attempts to understand Christianity as a seed of Buddhism that has been carried far away by the wind, and to prepare a Buddhistic epoch in Europe, with an occasional rapprochement with Catholic-Christian formulas and sentiments.

Wagner is Schopenhauerian when he preaches mercy in our relations with animals. As we know, Schopenhauer's predecessor at this point was Voltaire who may already have mastered the art that we encounter among his successors – to dress up his hatred against certain things and people as mercy for animals. At least Wagner's hatred of science, which finds expression in his preachment, is certainly not inspired by any spirit of kindness and benignity – nor indeed, as is obvious, by anything meriting the name of spirit."

Charles Darwin proved that famine relief sucks and he was pro famine relief. He also helped make eugenics popular. That is why he was one of the worst philosophers ever.

Here is a quote from Hitler.

“Since I regularly woke up before five o’clock in the morning, I had gotten in the habit of putting a few left-overs or crusts of bread on the floor for the mice which amused themselves in my little room, and watching the droll little beasts chasing around after these choice morsels. I had known so much poverty in my life that I was well able to imagine the hunger, and hence also the pleasure, of the little creatures.”

Here is a quote from Nietzsche.

“That our modern natural sciences have become so thoroughly entangled in this Spinozistic dogma (most recently and worst of all, Darwinism with its incomprehensibly onesided doctrine of the “struggle for existence”) is probably due to the origins of most natural scientists: In this respect they belong to the “common people”; their ancestors were poor and undistinguished people who knew the difficulties of survival only too well at firsthand. The whole of English Darwinism breathes something like the musty air of English overpopulation, like the smell of the distress and overcrowding of small people. But a natural scientist should come out of his human nook; and in nature it is not conditions of distress that are dominant but overflow and squandering, even to the point of absurdity. The struggle for existence is only an exception, a temporary restriction of the will of life. The great and small struggle always revolves around superiority, around growth and expansion, around power – in accordance with the will to power which is the will to life.”

Josephus says:

"Now it was Nimrod who excited them to such an affront and contempt of God. He was the grandson of Ham the son of Noah. He was a bold man, and of great strength of hand. He persuaded them not to ascribe it to God, as if it was through his means they were happy, but to believe that it was their own courage, which procured that happiness. He also gradually changed the government into tyranny, seeing no other way of turning men from the fear of God, but to bring them into a constant dependence on his power...(Antiquities of the Jews Chapter 4:2)" men exert their utmost skill to save the life of every one to the last moment. There is reason to believe that vaccination has preserved thousands, who from a weak constitution would formerly have succumbed to small-pox. Thus the weak members of civilised societies propagate their kind. No one who has attended to the breeding of domestic animals will doubt that this must be highly injurious to the race of man. It is surprising how soon a want of care, or care wrongly directed, leads to the degeneration of a domestic race; but excepting in the case of man himself, hardly any one is so ignorant as to allow his worst animals to breed.

The aid which we feel impelled to give to the helpless is mainly an incidental result of the instinct of sympathy, which was originally acquired as part of the social instincts, but subsequently rendered, in the manner previously indicated, more tender and more widely diffused. Nor could we check our sympathy, even at the urging of hard reason, without deterioration in the noblest part of our nature. The surgeon may harden himself whilst performing an operation, for he knows that he is acting for the good of his patient; but if we were intentionally to neglect the weak and helpless, it could only be for a contingent benefit, with an overwhelming present evil. We must therefore bear the undoubtedly bad effects of the weak surviving and propagating their kind; but there appears to be at least one check in steady action, namely that the weaker and inferior members of society do not marry so freely as the sound; and this check might be indefinitely increased by the weak in body or mind refraining from marriage, though this is more to be hoped for than expected.

The great break in the organic chain between man and his nearest allies, which cannot be bridged over by any extinct or living species, has often been advanced as a grave objection to the belief that man is descended from some lower form; but this objection will not appear of much weight to those who, convinced by general reasons, believe in the general principle of evolution. Breaks incessantly occur in all parts of the series, some being wide, sharp and defined, others less so in various degrees; as between the orang and its nearest allies—between the Tarsius and the other Lemuridæ—between the elephant and in a more striking manner between the Ornithorhynchus or

The following search terms have been highlighted: may hope we

Echidna, and other mammals. But all these breaks depend merely on the number of related forms which have become extinct. At some future period, not very distant as measured by centuries, the civilised races of man will almost certainly exterminate and replace throughout the world the savage races. At the same time the anthropomorphous apes, as Professor Schaaffhausen has remarked,¹⁶ will no doubt be exterminated. The break will then be rendered wider, for it will intervene between man in a more civilised state, as we may hope, than the Caucasian, and some ape as low as a baboon, instead of as at present between the negro or Australian and the gorilla.

We can see why it is that aborigines, who have long inhabited islands, and who must have been long exposed to nearly uniform conditions, should be specially affected by any change in their habits, as seems to be the case. Civilised races can certainly resist changes of all kinds far better than savages; and in this respect they resemble domesticated animals, for though the latter sometimes suffer in health (for instance European dogs in India), yet they are rarely rendered sterile, though a few such instances have been recorded.⁴⁷ The immunity of civilised races and domesticated animals is probably due to their having been subjected to a greater extent, and therefore having grown somewhat more accustomed, to diversified or varying conditions, than the majority of wild animals; and to their having formerly immigrated or been carried from country to country, and to different families or sub-races having inter-crossed. It appears that a cross with civilised races at once gives to an aboriginal race an immunity from the evil consequences of changed conditions. Thus the crossed offspring from the Tahitians and English, when settled in Pitcairn Island, increased so rapidly that the island was soon overstocked; and in June 1856 they were removed to Norfolk Island. They then consisted of 60 married persons and 134 children, making a total of 194. Here they likewise increased so rapidly, that although sixteen of them returned to Pitcairn Island in 1859, they numbered in January 1868, 300 souls;

⁴⁷ 'Variation of Animals,' &c., vol. ii. p. 16.

the males and females being in exactly equal numbers. What a contrast does this case present with that of the Tasmanians; the Norfolk Islanders increased in only twelve and a half years from 194 to 300; whereas the Tasmanians decreased during fifteen years from 120 to 46, of which latter number only ten were children.⁴⁸

So again in the interval between the census of 1866 and 1872 the natives of full blood in the Sandwich Islands decreased by 8081, whilst the half-castes, who are believed to be healthier, increased by 847; but I do not know whether the latter number includes the offspring from the half-castes, or only the half-castes of the first generation.

The cases which I have here given all relate to aborigines, who have been subjected to new conditions as the result of the immigration of civilised men. But sterility and ill-health would probably follow, if savages were compelled by any cause, such as the inroad of a conquering tribe, to desert their homes and to change their habits. It is an interesting circumstance that the chief check to wild animals becoming domesticated, which implies the power of their breeding freely when first captured, and one chief check to wild men, when brought into contact with civilisation, surviving to form a civilised race, is the same, namely, sterility from changed conditions of life.

Finally, although the gradual decrease and ultimate extinction of the races of man is a highly complex problem, depending on many causes which differ in different places and at different times; it is the same problem as that presented by the extinction of one of the higher animals—of the fossil horse, for instance, which disappeared from South America, soon afterwards to be replaced, within the same districts, by countless troupes of the Spanish horse. The New Zealander seems conscious of this parallelism, for he compares his future fate with that of the native rat now almost exterminated by the European rat. Though the difficulty is great to our imagination, and really great, if we wish to ascertain the precise causes and their manner of action, it ought not to be so to our reason, as long as we keep steadily in mind that the increase of each species and each race is constantly checked in various ways; so that if any new check, even a slight one, be superadded, the race will surely decrease in number; and decreasing numbers will sooner or

On the Formation of the Races of Man.—In some cases the crossing of distinct races has led to the formation of a new race. The singular fact that Europeans and Hindoos, who belong to the same Aryan stock, and speak a language fundamentally the same, differ widely in appearance, whilst Europeans differ but little from Jews, who belong to the Semitic stock, and speak quite another language, has been accounted for by Broca,⁴⁹ through certain Aryan branches having been largely crossed by indigenous tribes during their wide diffusion. When two races in close contact cross, the first result is a heterogeneous mixture: thus Mr. Hunter, in describing the Santali or hill-tribes of India, says that hundreds of imperceptible gradations may be traced "from the black, squat tribes of the mountains to the tall olive-coloured Brahman, with his intellectual brow, calm eyes, and high but narrow head;" so that it is necessary in courts of justice to ask the witnesses whether they are Santalis or Hindoos.⁵⁰ Whether a heterogeneous people, such as the inhabitants of some of the Polynesian islands, formed by the crossing of two distinct races, with few or no pure members left, would ever become homogeneous, is not known from direct evidence. But as with our domesticated animals, a cross-breed can certainly be fixed and made uniform by careful selection⁵¹ in the course of a few generations, we may infer that the free intercrossing of a heterogeneous mixture during a long descent would supply the place of selection, and overcome any tendency to reversion; so that the crossed race would ultimately become homogeneous, though it might not partake in an equal degree of the characters of the two parent-races.

With mankind, especially with savages, many causes interfere with the action of sexual selection as far as the bodily frame is concerned. Civilised men are largely attracted by the mental charms of women, by their wealth, and especially by their social position; for men rarely marry into a much lower rank. The men who succeed in obtaining the more beautiful women, will not have a better chance of leaving a long line of descendants than other men with plainer wives, save the few who bequeath their fortunes according to primogeniture. With respect to the opposite form of selection, namely of the more attractive men by the women, although in civilised nations women have free or almost free choice, which is not the case with barbarous races, yet their choice is largely influenced by the social position and wealth of the men; and the success of the latter in life depends much on their intellectual powers and energy, or on the fruits of these same powers in their forefathers. No excuse is needed for treating this subject in some detail; for, as the German philosopher Schopenhauer remarks, "the final aim of all love intrigues, be they comic or tragic, is really of more importance than all other ends in human life. What it all turns upon is nothing less than the composition of the next generation.... It is not the weal or woe of any one individual, but that of the human race to come, which is here at stake."¹

The following search terms have been highlighted: Schopenhauer

They possessed hardly any arts, and like wild animals lived on what they could catch; they had no government, and were merciless to every one not of their own small tribe. He who has seen a savage in his native land will not feel much shame, if forced to acknowledge that the blood of some more humble creature flows in his veins. For my own part I would as soon be descended from that heroic little monkey, who braved his dreaded enemy in order to save the life of his keeper, or from that old baboon, who descending from the mountains, carried away in triumph his young comrade from a crowd of astonished dogs—as from a savage who delights to torture his enemies, offers up bloody sacrifices, practises infanticide without remorse, treats his wives like slaves, knows no decency, and is haunted by the grossest superstitions.

Man may be excused for feeling some pride at having risen, though not through his own exertions, to the very summit of the organic scale; and the fact of his having thus risen, instead of having been aboriginally placed there, may give him hope for a still higher destiny in the distant future. But we are not here concerned with hopes or fears, only with the truth as far as our reason permits us to discover it; and I have given the evidence to the best of my ability. We must, however, acknowledge, as it seems to me, that man with all his noble qualities, with sympathy which feels for the most debased, with benevolence which extends not only to other men but to the humblest living creature, with his god-like intellect which has penetrated into the movements and constitution of the solar system—with all these exalted powers—Man still bears in his bodily frame the indelible stamp of his lowly origin.

But while people in their "natural freedom" can run their lives very well by themselves, government rules and edicts distort that nature into an artificial Procrustean bed. As Chuang Tzu wrote, "The common people have a constant nature; they spin and are clothed, till and are fed — it is what may be called their 'natural freedom.'" These people of natural freedom were born and died themselves, suffered from no restrictions or restraints, and were neither quarrelsome nor disorderly. If rulers were to establish rites and laws to govern the people, "it would indeed be no different from stretching the short legs of the duck and trimming off the long legs of the heron" or "haltering a horse." Such rules would not only be of no benefit, but would work great harm. In short, Chuang Tzu concluded, the world "does simply not need governing; in fact it should not be governed."

The purpose of this book is to prove that Socialism is a religion. All of the most recent socialists worshiped Erasmus Darwin directly or indirectly. Dr. Darwin is partially responsible for Leftism, Socialism, Nationalism, Fascism, Communism, National Socialism, Global Socialism, Totalitarianism, Eugenicsism and the Industrial Revolution. Erasmus Darwin is the Modern Prometheus.

Hitler was evil before his girlfriend/niece died in 1931, on that day he became a vegetarian and The Modern Lycaon.

Charles Darwin was evil before his daughter died, but on that day he became a eugenicist and The Modern Nimrod.

Most big league Socialists married or wanted to marry their cousin, mom, dad, daughter, son, sister, brother, aunt, uncle, niece, nephew, or clone.

Most big league Socialists had sithless.

I think that Socialism is a religion and people should learn more about Nimrod and Erasmus Darwin.

DORWIN

Below are some theories that I have. I do not pretend that they are facts.

I think that eating from the tree of knowledge might mean learning to domesticate plants or domesticate animals or domesticate fire or lust or civilized people teaching wild people anything.

I think that eating from the tree of life might be about biology or Darwinism or eugenics or genetic engineering or cloning or creating human-animal hybrids or slowing the aging process.

I think eating from the tree of knowledge sucks for some wild people and eating from the tree of life sucks for everyone.

<http://biblehub.com/kjv/genesis/2.htm>

21And the LORD God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; 22And the rib, which the LORD God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man.

This is cloning! The ribs are the best! No wonder Cain was evil. Cain may not have been a vegetarian, he might have been a non-speciesist. I will not be discussing Abel in this book. "That's a rather tender subject."

Darwin was not an evolutionist!! He was a creationist/eugenicist!

Changes in living conditions cause wild animals and wild people to become less fertile. Changes in living conditions do not cause domesticated animals or civilized humans to become less fertile. Wild humans are wild animals. Civilized humans are domesticated animals. Some humans might have been domesticated on Patmos. Genetically engineered humans might exterminate and replace domesticated humans just like the domesticated humans exterminated and replaced the wild humans on Tasmania. Do you know why Global Socialism will be worse than National Socialism was?

Socialists teach that the history of the world has been a struggle for existence between the genders (China) or classes (Russia, Ethiopia) or races (Italy) or non-speciesists vs speciesists (France, Germany, Earth), but the real history of the world has been a struggle for existence between good and evil.

Defining good and evil.

World War I was Schopenhauer and ? vs ? and ?.

World War II was Wagner and Darwin vs Marx and Darwin.

The cold war was Darwin vs Marx. Marx/Derg ruled Ethiopia in the 70's and 80's.

Satan has most Governments, most corporations, Statue of Liberty/Semiramis, Santa Claus/Nimrod, most of the media, NASA, EPA, UN, WHO, entertainment, education, ICE, most militaries, fire, and electricity. God has the Heavenly Warrior, the Sword of Damocles, Angry Inuk, Common Sense, Elpis, rain, and magnets. Satan does not have a chance in Hell. Here is a list of righteous charities: Make-A-Wish

The devil's best tricks are to persuade you that he doesn't exist and God is dead. Voltaire and Erasmus Darwin proved that it is possible to destroy the establishment. Charles Darwin proved that survival is possible without Government.

The greatest masters of deception in the history of the world were Prometheus, Pandora, Nimrod, The Modern Prometheus/Erasmus Darwin, The Modern Pandora/Voltaire, and The Modern Nimrod/Charles Darwin.

Prometheus gave us the Neolithic Revolution and The Modern Prometheus gave us the Industrial Revolution. Zeus decided to end the Bronze Age with the great deluge. The Modern John the Baptist/Zeus told me that he is putin an end to the Industrial Age with the great revolution when the seven trumpets are sounded. I estimate that the Industrial Age might collapse in less than 16.6 years. The collapse of the Industrial Age might be worse than the collapse of the Bronze Age. The collapse might be violent, sudden and culturally disruptive. "The more things change, the more they stay the same." Food might not be our biggest problem. Our biggest problem might be finding or creating drinkable water. Boil river water. Walk south. Avoid humans.

A man went to Hell and was given a choice of three rooms. In the first room, the people were upside down with their heads on hot coals. In the second room, the people were upside down with their heads on knives. In the third room the people were standing up in feces up to their waists drinking coffee. The man chose the third room. A few minutes later, a demon walked in and said "OK, the coffee break is over."
Oh by the way, in case you haven't figured it out yet, we are in deep shit.

Vaya con Dios
